

TOP 12 THINGS TO DO IN SURREY

Approximately 1/3 of the land in Surrey is used for agricultural purposes and agri-tourism is growing in popularity. Surrey is one of the Lower Mainland's major agricultural producers, and as such our city is packed with local markets, farms and stands where you can buy fresh fruits and vegetables direct from its source. Other agri-tourism attractions include a corn maze, pumpkin patches, and our own local winery. Whether you prefer picking your own blueberries in the summer or want to go for a hay ride in the fall, it's all right here in Surrey.

Experience the diversity of trees at Redwood Park. In 1893, twins, David and Peter Brown, were given 80 acres of land by their father. Through the years, they collected seedlings from all over the world including California, Austria, Russia, Japan, France, and Italy. They planted 32 different species of evergreens and built a 2-storey treehouse. After their death in the mid 1900s, the park was turned over to the City of Surrey for maintenance and care.
